AN INTERESTING RELIC OF THE
SCOTCH HIGHLANDS
THE TARGE AND CLAYMORE
of
JOHN FARQUHARSON,
THE BLACK COLONEL.

James Farquharson—the last of Inverey—having disposed of his Deeside Estates, bought the estate of Bruxie and afterwards sold it with its contents, including these heirlooms of his ancestor, Black Jock, John Farquharson, the Black Colonel.

The sword and targe are contemporary and both bear the same ornamentation of red paint—probably a survival of red velvet or other cloth which was frequently used.

Both pieces bear evidence of considerable service, and, excepting the sword-blade, were certainly made on Deeside.

The targe is made of two-ply of thin firwood running at right angles, pinned with wooden dowells and covered with leather. Its decoration is partly tooled and partly an arrangement of brass studs, plates and bosses. The large central boss is fitted with a screw socket to hold a spike when in use. This boss, which is inscribed “D. S. F. GH. K.,” is fixed with brass studs and iron clasps. The four surrounding minor bosses form a cross of fine proportion round it, and four perforated and engraved circular plates of brass are centred between these.

The sword is a backsword of fine steel with decorated pommel and chased and cut hilt of hand-hammered iron.

The ornamentation has certainly been done on Deeside, and in all probability the construction of the targe, the sword pommel and the basket hilt also. The blade is probably an imported one.

These relics were got at Bruxie by James Cooper, M.D.
